GOT MONEY FROM YOUNG.

FOWLER'S DEALINGS WITH THE RE-PUBLICAN COMMITTEEMAN.

Says He Was Paid as a Democratic Election Officer to Do What He Could for the Republicans—Young Says He Was Merely Buying Information—Ten of the Accused Election Officers Give Mail.

The story of Republican corruption in Jersey City at the election last fall which Sheriff Davis told the Senate investigating committee it could learn from Nathan Fowler, Thomas N. Jordan, and Michael J. O'Mara came out yesterday afternoon at the committee's meeting in Jersey City. James C. Young, the accused Republican State Committeeman, answered it.

The afternoon session of the committee was more than half over when Fowler was called. He is an underpaid young man and one of the election officers who will appear in court this morning to waive examination on charges of selling in the ballot-box frauds. Lawyer Corbin conducted the examination. He invited Fowler to tell all he knew, and Fowler settled himself comfortably in the witness chair and began:

"Several weeks previous to election I had conversations with James C. Young in relation to what I could do for the Republicans at the election. I was the Democratic judge in the Fifth precinct of the First district. Young asked me to stand for the Republican party. I told Young that I didn't care particularly for the Democratic party, and that if I could do anything for the Republicans I would. He made a proposition to me then, and gave me $15 as a starter. I agreed to stand for the Republican ticket, and to do all I could for it."

"What were you expected to do for that money?" interrupted Lawyer Corbin.

"Oh, different things," said Fowler. "Sometimes, of course, when you are counting votes there come doubtful ballots that ought to be thrown out. The Election Board takes a vote, and of course if the majority are Democrats the ballot is counted for the Democratic candidate. When those doubtful ballots came up at the count I voted to count them for the Republicans."

"You mean you counted votes falsely for the Republican candidate?" asked Lawyer Corbin severely.

"No, sir," replied Fowler. "When the ques-

A SCHOOL OF NAVIGATION.

It Is in Burling Slip, and Taken in Yacht Owners and Other Ambitious Sailors.

Recently the steamship companies running vessels from this port to other American and foreign ports have established a rule that they will employ no one as second mate who has not taken out a master's license and thereby become eligible to take charge of the vessel in case of accident disabling the Captain and first mate. Formerly very few of the second mates on steamers were practical navigators, and often even the first mates knew little of the science. For a good while the second mates on transatlantic steamers have had to be navigators, but there was no such rule in the coast trade, and there is none now, except the regulation which the companies have voluntarily established. All of the well-known lines have made this regulation within the past few months and are said to be living up to it strictly. This fact has made business good at the only school of navigation there is handy for the second mates to go to to pick up the knowledge necessary to enable them to pass the examination for a Government license. The school has been running in Burling slip for over ten years. Capt. Howard Patterson, who managed it until a few months ago, went to Hayti to take a place in the navy of that country, and sold the school to Capt. Bonnington, who runs it now.

The school is devoted entirely to the science of navigation, and is intended especially for the benefit of seamen who are ambitious to rise in their business and become mates and masters. It has had about 500 graduates since it was started. They all have received diplomas certifying that they are navigators of the first grade and have passed satisfactory examinations in the following workings:

Shaping course and distance by parallel rules and dividers, dead reckoning, middle latitude sailing, Mercator's sailing, Sumner's method of calculating a ship's position, latitude by a meridian altitude of the sun, latitude by an ex-meridian altitude of the sun, latitude by an altitude of the polar star, latitude by a meridian observation of the moon, longitude by equal altitudes, longitude by a chronometer sight, longitude by sunrise and sunset sights, variation and deviation of a compass by amplitudes worked by inspection and logarithms, variation and deviation of a compass calculated by arithmetic formula for marking a log line, and the several adjustments of the sextant and quadrant.

Besides the sailormen who want promotion the principal patrons of the school are amateur yachtsmen who wish to be able to navigate their own vessels. Many such have come to the school and taken their lessons with the horny-handed old salts, but most of them make a private arrangement for instruction at home or aboard their yachts. For a certain sum the
